Dans l'esprit platonicien, dans lequel la poésie est notre vraie réalité, ces poèmes illustrés de fournir un aperçu de la vie d'un homme gai dans l'Amérique urbaine contemporaine. Écrit dans un bar, à la même table, à la même fenêtre, à peu près au même moment de la journée, ils offrent un nuage qui passe wordsworthien de l'émotion. Cette fenêtre particulière donne sur une rue urbaine américaine: les couples homosexuels de réglage les uns des autres des vêtements pour une collecte de fonds, les sans-abri omniprésente, occupent les manifestants, des touristes, des fanatiques religieux, les ivrognes, les hommes gais ayant une cigarette et les potins. La poésie est la vie; ces poèmes sont le miroir de ma vie, du blues anniversaire des craintes personnelles.

In the Platonic spirit, in which poetry is our truest reality, these illustrated poems provide a glimpse into a gay man's life in contemporary urban America. Written in one bar, at the same table, at the same window, at roughly the same time of day, they offer a passing Wordsworthian cloud of emotion. This particular window looks out on a true urban American street: gay couples adjusting one another's bowties for a fundraiser, the omnipresent homeless, occupy protesters, tourists, religious fanatics, drunks, gay men having a cigarette. Poetry is life; these poems are the mirror of one gay life, from birthday blues to thoughts on alcohol.
