FAO came into existence in the food crisis following World War II. Its mandate is to promote welfare and freedom from want through improving levels of nutrition and the efficiency of food and agricultural production and distribution. In 1993 when a new Director General was elected, it was suggested that the FAO needed to rethink its focus and organization in order to meet challenges in the global context of the 1990s. This publication is a record of the subsequent changes proposed by the Director General which have been launched and are being implemented.
